Why wouldn't we want to celebrate our own worth?

Why wouldn't people want those of us living with disabilities to feel conscious of and go so far as to celebrate our own worth?

Who decides what disability is and do we even need this label?

People living with disabilities represent the most variable and diverse minority in our society.

Whether you're living with a disability, related to or are a friend with someone who is disabled, or are being paid to support us, this training will help us answer the question: "How do you we feel about disability?"

If you want to take full advantage of this interactive and evocative workshop on Disability Pride on the web – webshop – you'll want to find a quiet space where you can choose to speak, video chat, write, and post to social media with Jeff and the other participants. Jeff will focus on Ableism, Intersectionality, The America Disability Act, Medical and Social Models of Disability, The History, and Culture of Disability, and our own experience.
